HARTIS OF LITERARY MEN.-John Cal rin commenced his studies at five or six in the morning, reading and writing in bed for hours together. If business required him to go out, he would rise and dress; but, on his return, again went to bed. As he advanced in years, he wrote little with his own hand, but dictated to secretaries, rarely having to make any corrections. Semetimes his faculty of composition would fail; then he would his bed, attend to his out-door duties for days, weeks, and even for months together, and not think of writ-ing until he felt the power had returned. Then he would go to bed, and resume his labors.

The great Cardinal Richelieu, who was The great Cardinal Richeneu, who was a dramatist as well as prime-minister of France, usually went to bed at eleven, slept three hours, would rise and write till eight in the morning, now and then amusing himself by playing with his cats, of which he was very fond.

Buffon, the naturalist, rose early and worked perpetually. His great "Studies of Nature" cost him five years of study; and he re-copied it eighteen times before he sent it to the printers. He composed in a singular manner, writing on largesize paper, on which, as in a ledger, five distinct columns were ruled. In the first column he wrote down the first thought; in the second he corrected, enlarged, and pruned it, and so on until he had reached the fifth column, in which he finally wrote the result of his labor. But, even after this, he would recon -pose a sentence twenty times; and once devoted fourteen hours to find the prop-er word with which to round off a

Cuvir, who raised comparative anatomy to a science, never had occasion to copy his manuscript. He composed very rapidly, the proper words falling in the proper place, and everything being arranged in his mind in a very orderly Bossuet, the French divine, who left fifty volumes of his own manuscript, rose at four, wrapped himself up in a loose dress of bear skin, and wrote until from sheer fatigue, his hand refused to hold the pen. Then he would return to bed, take the sleep of exhaustion, and, on awakening, go through the same
